Chapter 1 by George Langham

It's not that I wanted to lie about my name or my nature, but well, I tried not doing and things didn't turn out right.

Angry townsfolk with pitchforks and flaming torches, the usual.

(which I've always thought was odd, why they haven't switched to LED torches, I'll never know, far better for the wallet and the environment.)

So even since I was young by my standards, I've just been Bill Door.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

I've tried fitting in, I really have. It's hard when your father is the ultimate God of death and destruction, resurrects every hundred years or so, and demands that you join the family business. I have to change up my look, my name, everything. "Bill Door", my personal nickname for myself, refers to my uncanny ability to swing back and forth between personalities. I have been a playboy, a father, a Casanova, an accountant.
